Self-similar solitons, and in particular self-shrinking surfaces for the Mean Curvature Flow, are models for the formation of singularities in Mean Curvature Flow. Despite their importance, relatively few examples of self-shrinking surfaces have been rigorously shown to exist. I will describe a recent construction of an infinite family of closed, embedded self-shrinking surfaces. (Received September 05, 2015)