VICE-PRESIDENTS

The clause of the Society's constitution which first provided for a vice-president (to be elected annually) was adopted in Dec. 1889, and during 1890 Emory McClintock filled this office; he became president in the following year. All later presidents, except Newcomb, had been vice-presidents at earlier dates. An amended constitution of 1897 provided for a first vice-president and a second vice-president, and such officers were elected for each of the three years 1898-1900 (Woodward and Moore were respectively first and second vice-presidents in 1898; Moore and Fiske 1899-1900). But in 1900 another amendment enacted that there should be an election simply of two vice-presidents. This practice continued for more than a score of years, until further amendment in 1923. Beginning with 1924 the Society has always had three vice-presidents who, after the initial period, were each elected for biennial periods, and were ineligible for immediate reelection. In this way the following 77 individuals have served as vice-presidents, and have thus been, ex-officio, members of the Council of the Society. There is one case of father and son (Van Vleck) who have both been vice-presidents.
