
It is shown how the use of domain variation techniques simplify calculations required in the well-posedness analysis for a class of moving boundary value problems. The approach will be demonstrated by means of a model for the motion of a droplet sliding down an inclined plane, for which existence, regularity, and long time behavior of special solutions will be studied.

The droplet analysis is joint work with Christoph Walker. (Received January 29, 2019)